INTRODUCTION

Helping others has been a way of life for Chauchang Su. As the first in his family to immigrate to America, Chauchang (C.C.) took on the task of sponsoring an elder brother's family and two sisters, to help them obtain permanent residence. Once they arrived, he opened his home to those who needed it, some for several years.

Trained as an electrical engineer, C.C. was the unofficial family handyman for years. He was the one that family members would call when something broke at home. Whether it was dealing with electrical issues, plumbing or appliances, C.C. would do his best to fix the problems. On the rare instances when he couldn't, he would find someone who could.

Even now in his 80s, C.C. continues to help. He takes care of his grandchildren and helps mow the lawn for family members. A man of few words, he shows his love through acts of service.

"He is noble, altruistic and generous," said Alicia Su Wu, C.C.'s niece. "He has served an essential role in our family."
